The Senate passed Mr. Morrill'a Agricultural College bill, with amendments, which, it is believed, will not kinder its passage in the House. The amendments confer the benefits of the accordance of the sense of the set, and allows twenty thousand additional acres for each Rapresentative which any State may gain at the next censure.

why it should not be stated.

The House was in session last evening, the School Law being under discussion. A series of amendments to the existing law had been prepared by Mr. Bateman, the Superintendent of Public Instruction, in conjunction with the Committee on Education; and they were generally adopted. The most important of these was one changing the basis of the distribution of the school fund, and another limiting the amount of taxation imposed by local officers for school purposes. As you will, undoubtedly, find them in your more minute report of legislative proceedings, I omit details which might not be correct, as I have not the amendments before me.

This action of the House settles its policy in regard to education. The friends of the Free Schools may be assured that the system which its process and care, and which has been put into operation in the face of such violent and protracted opposition, will not be materially weakened, at any rate, during this screenoon, the Leavitt claim has she stood. She shuddered, and dared not move a step forward.

She looked round and saw a window open. The thought flashed upon her that she might avail herself of the circumstance. But he suffers so dreadfully! How frightfully he screams! The rope must be cut. Duna advanced a few steps. That horrid gaping mouth! Duna tottered back, and mechanically, unconscious of what she did, she raised herself to the window-ledge and dropped from it lato the court-yard.

When she was in the court-yard, whe knew not what she had done, or what she was to do. She had escaped the sight of that ferocious satiant mouth, but not the influence of bor tormentor. He had facelonted her. He was still lord of her life. Her knees trembled; she dared not withdraw from the window. "Well what is it then? Speak out. Avdotys Yeremeyevna. Cao't you make up your mind? Hang the lock! Avdotys Yeremeyevna, I wait your answer, my precious.
This is the strongest lock I've seen this many a day. Will you speak or not."
The secretary door burst open with a crash. ash. "Whoo! what a lot of fine things! Bank notes, and ducats, and watches! They don't go; spoiled most likely. A ring! I don't want it. Oh, l'il take these diamonds. Are these all crumbs of office?" "Hat you young jade!" howled the miscreant savagely; "you have done cleveriy; I de have shi your throat like a chicker's."
These words attered in unspeakable agony and d spair, suddenly railled the girl's energies. She ran to the gate." The induster's horrid jest had proved his borrid junishment.
Could he have supposed that he ited the knot for himselt? Could be have supposed that that awith moment, in which her foot hing over the grave, should be the moment of deliverance to the innocent, and of excinplary punishment to the guilty? Here was the hinger of Provishmen. It is everywhere. It is a falsebood that vice and crime alone prosper in this world.

She ran, and ran, till her strength was night exhaustel; no one was in sight. She ran further, her breath failed; her limbs tottered; the dared not look round, lest she should again see that learlind moutti; lest she should again fall into the hands of her persecutor. Nowhere a living soul. She struggled up a rising ground.

"Ab! there is our batter; and there is yeaks; and Prochor. Ah! he too is with want it. Ob, I'll take these diamonds. Are these all crumbs of office?"
Chatting in this fashion with himself and with Duna, he crammed his pockets with money, watches, and trinkets, and then turned abruptly to the half-dead girl. "Well my love, your choice?" Waste no time; but tell me what death will you die?"
Well, I'm sure! Ar'n't you ashamed, sir! It is a very agly joke this."
"I am not joking at all, my sweet one."
"What bare I done to you? You have taken what ever you pleased; I did not binder you." nder you."
"That's very true ; but do you see, I can't hanging? Where is he hanging? Give us a kiss, Danushka. Tis a merry world."

"He is hanging, I tell you! Don't laugh. Run to the house. Take forks, hatebets, guns—a thief—a murderer, with great moustaches and a red nose! He said he would slit my throat like a chicken's—that he'd hang me."

They hastened their steps, armed themselves as well as they could, broke the housed door open, and went into the parlor. The robber had fainted; blood streamed from his mouth and nose: the arm by which he hune.

"Intervery true; but do you see, i can't abide leaving eye-witcess behind me; I wash my hands of them by all means. With others I don't stand on ecremony; but as you, my leve, are such a nice good-natured, amiable little dear, I will give you your choice of death. I love politeness; I, too, have been brought up in St. Petersburgh."

Sull she would not believe that he was in earnest. Still she would not believe that he was in earnest.

"Now then, lets have it at once; I have no time to loose. Let us put compliments aside. I am extremely sorry, but you must die by my haud. I am not going to be such a fool as to let you live, to tell what sort of moustaches, eyes, nose, clothes, &c. I have got—what I did bere, and which way I went. Now, Advotys Yeremeyevna, answer quickly."

Now, All on a terrely and the cold-blooded torturer, was a dagger stroke to her; her whole blood, all the warm current of her life circlied back upon her hear? Her limbs grew icy cold, and floods of tears powred ove her inanimate face. She tottered and fell to the floor. In her fall she caught the robber's foot, and kissed it. "Have mercy on me?" she shricked. "Oh, spare my life, I implore you! I pushed the corner of the lable towards him.

The villain reached it with the toes of one fort; he raised himself up a few lines. It was for him a moment of heavenly enjoyment.

Never it his whole life had he known one like it—not even after the most successful murder. His agony was less intolerable; he drew breath again; but his left hand, which he tried to use fo free his right, was becambed and powerless. The knot, too, had grown too tight; the reprobate feit that he could do no more without aid.

'Avdotya Yeremeyevna!—kind friend!—good girl! do me the favor! jump apon the kill you; I only meant to frighten you. Ob, how my head swims!"

The milecreant's torture touched the kind-hearted girl's soul. The feeling of compassion prot sufficiently extinguishes in women the thought or their own danger. That woman thinks with ber heart, has been said thousands of times since the invention of printing. In Duns's bosom compassion prevailed over fear, and aidfed the voice of self-preservation. She sprang upon the table, and hard at the knot. She

A NEW BOOK THE LADYS Petch a knife, and out the cursed rope; I am dying with pain."

The girl jumped off the table and ran to the pantry. Foor creature! She little knew the return the red-nosed guest was prepared to make for her kindness of heart. She found a kniie; she hurried hack; she was on the threshold of the scene of torture, when the table on which the robber had rested his foot turned over with a loud noise. He had upset it in endeavoring to change his feet. Once more he was swinging with all his weight in the air. A piercing yell told the sudden renewal of his former tortures. Duna stopped short at the door. His hideously distorted face struck her with involuntary horror; she thought it was Sahan's own features she beheld. The sight riveted her to the spot where she stood. She shuddered, and dared not move a step forward. Manual of Fancy Work,
